Combining History Learning and Human Rights Education in Formal, Non-formal and Higher Education

Book Launches & Symposium

29 & 30 September 2016, Freie Universität Berlin, Germany

What opportunities offer combinations of human rights education and history learning/education for the learners that further development of both educational approaches? And what would such a combination look like in formal, non-formal and higher education?

The joint presentation of the newly published Change handbook and the Crossing Borders anthology provide ideas and answers from theoretical and practice perspectives on combining history learning/education and human rights education approaches.

The symposium offers contributions by experts as well as room for exchanges of ideas and practical exercises, and the development of strategies for implementing combined history learning/education and human rights education approaches.

 Martin Lücke, Felisa Tibbitts, Else Engel, Lea Fenner (Eds.) (2016): Change – Handbook for History Learning and Human Rights Education in Formal, Non-formal and Higher Education.

There will be dedicated workshops for secondary school teachers, university lecturers involved in teacher training, educators at museums and memorial sites and educators in non-formal education.

Throughout the event we will collect ideas and discuss possibilities – such as creating a network – to support and sustain the exchanges on this combined approach.

Participants are invited to present their work and materials on combining history learning/education and human rights education at the market place.

The working language of the book launches and the symposium is English.
